

Marine Shipping

Shipping boats across the world is something which is done daily by many people with many companies but no one actually looks at how it is done. There are a lot of things that need to be done to prepare for the shipment at the marine, to move the boat from point A to point B, and to place it at the new location. However, it all starts at the marine where your boat is. You have to prepare the boat for the shipment so it'll be ready when the company gets there to pick it up. You have to disconnect any batteries and pack them away, pack away loose gear on the ship, including the loose items on the outside of the ship like antennas. You will have to close, tape, and seal doors, cabin windows, and maybe even take out windshields. All these things take time and responsibility, you have to know what your doing in order to do it properly.

While there is a lot of this information that you can find online, contacting the marine shipping company which you are using can help you know what to do exactly. They may even send a few of their workers over to help do it, maybe free, maybe costly.

Besides preparing for the shipping of the boat, you also have to make sure that there is someone at the receiving location for the boat and is on standby for a phone call to confirm that he or she is ready for the boat to be dropped off at that location.

There will be contracts to sign, bills to be paid, so when going marine shipping, think of it as going shopping for your first car. Researching the market is very important so you are guaranteed the top service available when shipping your boat.
